CONTEXT

Of the different implications of the current phase of globalization, those pertaining to labour market and employment relations assume paramount importance. It is now evident that the labour market outcomes of globalization have not been uniformly beneficial or socially inclusive. Growth of employment has not matched the growth of output. More and more employment is being generated in informal sector characterized by poor working conditions and lack of effective social protection. There are also massive transformations that are taking place in the context of employment relations. The employment relation system is becoming increasingly decentralized. Rapid flow of technology is considerably altering production structures and work organization.

It is important that labour administrators have a clear understanding on the nature and characteristics of the emerging labour market and employment relations in a global economy. This is critical from the perspective of formulating employment policies, which will be conducive for generation of productive and decent jobs. Accelerated pace of transformations in the world of work also demand that the administrators enhance their leadership and motivational skills to influence different social partners to respond to the challenges of change. There is also an urgent need that the major changes introduced in labour and social policies to respond to the challenges of globalization and their effects are also shared and discussed.

It is in this context, that the V.V. Giri National Labour Institute is organizing a Training Programme on Globalization, Changing Employment Relations and Labour Administration.
